

tokyoplastic

Tokyoplastic is Sam Lanyon Jones and Drew Cope. Together they were raised by Amish foster parents and were terrified of television and computers until divine intervention exposed them to the joy of internet porn. After leaving home and traveling the world they were reunited by chance in 2002 and fathered tokyoplastic taking it from humble beginnings as a 15 second claymation nano-series to the internationally recognized website it is today.

From their underground laboratory in the heart of London they have reached out across the vastness of the interweb to touch the hearts of a small audience of millions. Their awards are too numerous to list here (most significantly the audience award at the sundance online film festival, the Flash Forward 3D category three years in a row and a lovely D&AD pencil) and their creative projects cover a spectrum ranging from dildo design to the direction of multimillion dollar advertising campaigns.

They have had the pleasure of working with Microsoft, Aiwa, Mitsubishi, Guy Ritchie, Dreamworks SKG, AMD, Microsoft again and having just completed their second campaign for car giant Toyota. Right now they are both looking forward to returning to Philadelphia were Kelly McGillis will nurse them back to health.

Don't let the fun stop here. Check them out!
